Description: What practices in group therapy could be relevant and meaningful to the individual therapist? In this presentation, we will practice “thinking group” in relation to individual clients and ourselves.

Learning Objectives:

Participants will be able to:

1. List three group concepts useful in individual psychotherapy.
2. Identify one of the therapist’s best, and often underutilized, tools.
3. Apply two principles of “thinking group” to work with an individual client.
